LINK is the national intermediary for Scotland's voluntary, citizen-led, environmental organisations, with over 40 member organisations and a collective membership of more than 500,000 people. LINK's aim is to secure a sustainable Scotland, where our society and wellbeing have nature at their heart, benefitting people, communities and the planet. Members represent a wide range of environmental interests, employing land managers, service providers, campaigners and policy experts working on issues including agriculture, wildlife, landscape, health and wellbeing, environmental economics, environmental governance and environmental justice. Members have a common goal of contributing to a more environmentally sustainable society. Members come together as LINK to share resources and knowledge, to build a stronger and louder voice together and to bring an informed environment voice into policy and public debates through LINK members. The value of this joint working appeals across the membership, from large to small organisations. It delivers more effective use of limited resources through sharing and it provides mutual support at a time of eco-anxiety and pressures from divisive media and politics.

Job Purpose

Background on Scottish Environment LINK

Scottish Environment LINK is the liaison body for Scotland's voluntary sector environment organisations. Established in 1987, LINK provides a forum for its member organizations to meet, exchange information and take joint action on issues of common concern. LINK's 40+ organizations share a common interest in seeing Scotland develop sustainably, in being a strong voice for the environment in Scotland and an effective efficient and accountable network. Their total, combined, membership is around half a million people.

LINK members work through policy groups, which focus on a range of policy issues, developing common positions and advocating to decision-makers in Scotland and, where appropriate, at UK and international levels. Network priorities are reviewed annually and inform the work of staff who provide advice, support and coordination to the collective work programme. A cycle of membership events keeps members informed and ensures integration across the network including members' Congress, AGM and forward planning meetings, and a festive reception.

LINK is supported by a Board of volunteer trustees most of whom are involved in the network on behalf of their organisations; also by active honorary fellows. Core work is supported by a small staff including (Perth HQ) Chief Officer, Development Manager, Finance and Operations Manager and LINK's EDI Officer, and (Edinburgh) Advocacy Manager, two Advocacy Officers, Administrative Office Administrator, Campaign Coordinator and Communications Officer. Staff liaise closely to support members and groups in achieving collective objectives. LINK also manages projects via its Marine and Economics groups, funded discretely and employing dedicated Marine Policy & Engagement Officers and Sustainable Economics Policy Officer. Core activity is funded by subscriptions from member bodies, grants from NatureScot and Scottish Government and donations from charitable trusts.

The LINK website is designed to carry up-to-date information for members, the public, government audiences and other interests. LINK Groups meet online to increase participation by members. Face to face meetings, including Congress and receptions are held in Edinburgh or Perth, besides which staff may be required to travel to other parts of Scotland, and sometimes further afield. LINK operates an environmental policy in relation to procurement, travel and energy use, which staff and members work together in promoting.

LINK strives to be an equal opportunities employer and hosts an active project to support and increase diversity, equality and inclusion in the sector in Scotland.
